Students Hold Annual Model United Nations

By JIM WALKER
THIS Student Reporter

The ninth annual Model United Nations was held at Loyola University last Saturday. The Model United Nations is held to place students, the leaders of tomorrow, on the stage of international tension. Students are given a chance to gain knowledge of the complex issues facing our leaders each day of their public lives. Students represented the several countries who make up the United Nations. Some of the students were dressed in native costumes. Each student played the part of an actor on the international stage.

REPRESENTATIVES of the various schools at the model sessions were assigned to committees including the Security Council; political and security committee; social, cultural, and humanitarian committees; economic and financial committees, an ad hoc committee, and the Trusteeship Council.

Your reporter was a member of the Jordan delegation and was assigned to the Social, Cultural, and Humanitarian Committee.

OUR COMMITTEE met at 9:30 a.m. Saturday and began a debate on a bill introduced by the Union of South Africa. The bill was to tell the United States and the United Nations to stay out of South Africa's racial problems. Canada and Portugal presented a strong affirmative while Ukraine, Soviet Russia, and Ireland presented strong opposition.

The bill was defeated after a long debate despite an eloquent speech by the Union of South Africa delegate.

THE COMMITTEES met at the General Assembly after the lunch period. Several bills were brought before the assembly and two were passed. One, sponsored by the Philippine Republic, concerned the failure of Soviet Russia to pay full dues. Statistics were presented which indicated that the United States paid 32 per cent of the UN income while Russia, scheduled to pay 14 per cent, actually had been paying only 3 per cent.

The bill provided that any country that could afford to pay its dues yet did not do so should have its vote canceled in the General Assembly.

BYLO-RUSSIA put up a brilliant defense for the Communist bloc.

Nevertheless, the bill passed with Jordan abstaining.

A bill originating in the ad hoc committee was sponsored by Costa Rica. It called for economic pressures by member nations and organizations against Cuba and that the island nation be reprimanded

"for the present aggressive action it is taking against the peaceful democratic governments of all Latin American countries."

A controversial bill sponsored by the USSR which failed sought to get the Peoples Republic of China into the United Nations. The bill was voted on a roll call, asked for by the South Africa delegation.

The entire Communist bloc voted for the bill, but the small nations and the Western bloc defeated the measure.

A FEW BILLS were brought up to consume time on the floor but were not considered during the day.

After the General Assembly meeting, bills that passed were mailed by the secretary to the United Nations in New York. Awards were given to students for the most original costumes, best platform presentation, and for arguments.

The French delegation won third place and Bylo-Russia won second place. A three-way split for the first place with Torrance High's Jordan, South Africa, and the Philippine sharing the honors.
